

Bridge rescue

One day in 2007, Bob was walking across a bridge in the Sierra Nevada mountains in California. When he was halfway across, he saw something that he had never seen before. Coming towards him, in the opposite direction, was a car.

Bob froze. He felt scared. He was terrified. He was so terrified that he jumped over the side of the bridge. Fortunately, he managed to catch a ledge and pull himself to safety. Unfortunately, he was now stuck.

News of Bob reached the authorities and when they arrived at the scene, they found Bob fast asleep on the ledge. It was getting late and nothing could be done that day. So everyone went home and made a plan.

The next morning they returned with a net which they positioned under the bridge. They shot Bob with a tranquilliser dart and waited for him to fall asleep. Then they used a pole to push groggy Bob off the ledge and into the net. Bob was lowered to the ground and set free.

And as he went on his way, Bob thought to himself, "My wife is never going to believe this story."

You can see the blob-free images here

